

4. Five Years Left...

Santiago de Chile, 14-05-2007

There are several theories and speculations about what will happen in the year 2012. Many people have researched and written books about this issue; the information is mostly based on the predictions of the Maya civilisation. The Maya believed that being aware of the past meant knowing the cycle influences that determine the present, and therefore knowing the cyclical influences of the future as well.

One thousand years ago, the Maya marked the end of the 5,126 year era on December 2012, the end of our present age. They predicted that during this time, the sun will be aligned with the centre of the galaxy for the first time in 26,000 years. Therefore changes could occur regarding the magnetic field of the sun, which could lead to consequences for all human kind such as some sort of transformation and birth of a new era.

The Maya, who are often referred to as “sky watchers”, carved in several monuments their prophecies as well as beliefs, so that the future generations could decode the messages. They predicted that the new era, which starts in 2012, will be a still-point turnabout, meaning a time where everything stays the way it is, where humanity has no more hope for spiritual evolution or for saving the earth unless a drastic change occurs. In other words, humans need to evolve spiritually during the next five years, before 2012. This cycle and timing is also mentioned in one way or another in Ancient Egyptian texts, Vedas and Chinese mythology¹.

Some indigenous people of Asia, Africa and the Americas who engaged in astronomical observation for thousands of years predicted that after 2012 there would be cataclysms on a more physical plane rather than metaphysical. However, these events will not take place all of a sudden, but rather during several years.

This theory suggests that as the earth will pass inside the centre of a magnetic axis, it will be badly affected due to its environmental degradation, and might not even survive the consequences. As humanity enters a new age or dawn, there could be very serious physical events, such as earthquakes, tsunamis, volcanic eruptions, floods, lack of potable water, and extreme pollution which will lead to diseases. These prophecies say that there will be very few survivors left on the planet earth.

Some researchers also believe that the beginning of a new era is actually the birth of a new dimensional existence for Humankind. According to this theory, only spiritually evolved human beings will have the opportunity to ascend to some superior state or different existential plane. On the other hand, those who stay in our current dimension are doomed to live in a reality where the planet will eventually be destroyed, whether by cataclysms or pollution, and humans will not be able to advance on any spiritual level.

¹ See Authors such as Michael Cremo, Terrence Mackenna, Graham Hancock, William Henry and David Wilcock